It seems March was a pretty quiet month. Between the rain and the snow, the field has been a bit soggy and under water.

At the last meeting, Tim Sorensen mentioned he filed the application for the field to be an FAA-Recognized Identification Area (FRIA). If you have been following the new rules, (which I haven't) this should allow us to utilize the field as normal and without having to equip any reporting modules in our planes at the field.

For show and tell, Ken Ceranski brought in an Explorer by Flite Test. If you are not familiar with Flite Test, they have several foam board kits available, from floaters to warbirds. This model is a great choice, especially in the Spring, when there isn't much runway. You can hand launch it and land at your feet.

Monthly Recap

Speaking of water on the field, why not just fly a float plane? Well, usually when the water is that high, the gates to Oakwood road are closed. But it's a good option. Mike McCullough brought in his just finished, kit built, Ace Sea Master 40. It was 5 years in the making, powered by a OS 55 AX, and covered in Oratex.

Lastly, Tim Sorensen brought in a clear fuel tank he got from Amazon. If you hate bending the brass tubes for traditional tanks, this might be for you. The brand is ZY Hobby and they offer various sizes. I'm not sure why Dubro or Sullivan do not offer clear tanks yet.

It is a really nice feature to see where your clunk is and if your plane has a hatch, checking fuel consumption is a breeze.

Product Spotlight

Old School Model Works - Minuette

From one of the few companies still making kits comes a new model, The Minuette. Thanks to Jim Hatzenbeller for sending this out. This is a really cool model that has lots of character. It's 67.5 inch wingspan and can be built with or without ailerons. The kit goes for $190 shipped and has a separate accessory bundle for the dummy radial and flying wires. Check it out here:
